Dirty Politics Exposed in Bankrupt City of San Bernardino

Kim Carter, CEO of Time For Change Foundation, speaks at the Monday morning protest that the foundation held on the steps of city hall.

SAN BERNARDINO, CA—Time for Change Foundation held a press conference on the steps of City Hall to expose the dirty politics, once again plaguing the bankrupt City of San Bernardino. Concerned citizens, community activists, spiritual leaders and the homeless joined with Time for Change Foundation (TFCF) to demand that the City Council do at least what the community does for them, VOTE. The community united in one voice for Honesty, Integrity and Transparency (HIT) within the city leadership holding signs declaring "Stop the Dirty Politics" and "Cheating is Bad for Business."

TFCF, a local non-profit organization, and low income housing developer, dedicated to serving the disenfranchised, has been denied Federal Home Investment Partnership Funds designed to be administered through the City after winning a recent bid competition for their new low income housing development project.

"We won that competition fair and square. This is about the jobs that are going to be created in our community, it's about the safe and decent housing that we are going to have in our community," said Kim Carter, Executive Director and Founder of TFCF, "we're not going to allow dirty politicians to rob us one more time. We're here today about the residents of San Bernardino who can't afford to be cheated out of one more taxpayer dollar in our city. We need investments in our community and that's not going to happen if we keep allowing leadership to come in here and play dirty politics. Is this city open for business or what?"

San Bernardino is a city trying to rebuild itself. No entity will be willing to come to San Bernardino to invest if the City does not hold to the competition process. (To read more, visit www.wssnews.com).
